Fred Brach Brings 25 Years of Affordable Housing Design Experience

HADDONFIELD, N.J. (April 21, 2026) – Fred Brach, an architectural designer with 25 years of experience in architecture, planning, and design, has joined Walters Architecture to lead the design of Walters' affordable housing communities.

“Brach’s depth of experience in sustainable design will enhance our growing affordable housing portfolio,” said Joe Del Duca, partner and director of affordable housing for Walters. “Our team takes great pride in developing high-quality communities that not only meet rigorous construction standards but also reflect our long-term commitment to environmental stewardship.”

As an architectural designer, Brach brings over two decades of experience in the design of affordable housing developments as well as a long-standing relationship with Walters. To date, he has contributed to the design and completion of nearly 20 communities for the firm. Brach currently leads design efforts on two Walters projects underway in Cranbury and Hamilton, New Jersey.

“One of the most rewarding aspects of my work is turning even the most challenging sites into successful developments,” said Brach. “Designing to LEED standards pushes us beyond traditional development practices, requiring a holistic approach where materials, systems and construction techniques work together to lower energy use and minimize environmental impact.”

Walters is a real estate owner, developer, and property manager committed to the highest construction standards and environmentally responsible building practices.
